英国ジェントルマン☆ミスター・ジョニ石川の「これ、ウケる!」NIPPONカルチャー

I often hear my father complaining about the increasing amount of self-service petrol stations in Japan. In comparison in England it has always been self-service and in my opinion I prefer self service. This is because firstly I don't have to experience that really awkward moment when they're wiping the windows. (I never know where to look when they're doing it) In England when you put the petrol in you have to watch the screen while filling up and you have to stop it when it reaches the amount that you want to pay. Ever since I was a child I've always found it funny when my mother always ended up with £20.01 worth of petrol as she was unable to stop at £20. Recently I saw the new self service petrol stations in Japan and you can just enter the amount of petrol that you want to pay. So in the end it all comes down to the advancing technologies and due to this there isn't much of a difference between the self service and normal petrol stations anymore.
